[From To-Day's New York Times.]

The originals of the two significant and interest-ing letters which follow are in the possession of the editor of the Times. They were written by Col. John R. Fellows to William M. Tweed the day after the disagreement of the jury which had been trying the boss for plundering the city, when if ever, he must have felt grateful to whomsoever no matter how little, had helped him to escape from the righteous consequences of his crimes:

It is nearly fifteen years since Col. Fellows dried the ink upon those letters and rang the bell for the inessenger who carried these abject pleadings for money to the great chieftain of the Democracy, whom the Times had huried from his high estate, and when he peruses their contents to-day singular and humiliating memories must arise in his mind. He has never since felt inclined to repay the " loan" which Tweed made him-not even by just claim upon him for the money, from which he can only escape by pleading the statute of limita-

But it was not a loan. It was, in all probability, valuable services that had been rendered at the most critical time in his existence-services which the public office held by Col. Fellows up to Jan. 1, 1873, had given him remarkable ability to render.

For the three years preceding Jan. 1, 1873, Col. John R. Fellows had been an Assistant District-Attorney of the city and county of New York, Samuel B. Garvin being District-Attorney. Dur-ing that period the Times made the disclosures force of public indignation, as represented by the mittee of Seventy and its counsel, had made the District-Attorney's Office assist in the finding of indictments against Tweed and other members of the ring by the Grand Jury.

Col. Fellows, no matter how greatly against his will, had to assist in the preparation of these indictments, and the counsel of the Committee of Seventy, no matter how greatly against their will, had to allow him to become familiar with the de-talls of the case which they had built up against the thieves. Possessing this knowledge—invalua-ble to Tweed—Col. Fellows went out of office between the finding of the indictments and the beginning of Tweed's trial, which occurred in the Court of Oyer and Terminer, Judge Noah Davis presiding, Jan. 7, 1873. Benjamin K. Phelps was then the District-Attorney. Associated with him in the prosecution were Lyman Tremaine and Wheeler H. Peckham, and Tweed's acknowledged and visible counsel were John Graham, David Dudley Field, William Fullerton, John Burrill and William O. Bartlett, the principal leader writer of

The great danger feared by the prosecution was the corruption of the jury, which the loose law and the looser administration of that day made easy. The Sheriff, Matthew Brennan, and the Commis sioner of Jurors were friends of Tweed and did everything that they dared to aid him. On the evening of Jan. 30 Judge Davis charged the jury in the presence of a crowd which filled the court-room to its utmost capacity. The newspapers of the next day gave the names of many of those who were present, and in them may be found this interesting collocation: "Billy" Moloney, "Fatty" Walsh, Mark Lanigan, Jack Rourke, "Jimmy" Dunphy and Col. John R. Fellows. How many times since has the Colonel sat "cheek by jowl" with "Billy" Moloney and "Patty" Walsh in more private places than the Court of Oyer and Terminer? Was not the grouping ominous of the future ? The jurors being unable to agree, Judge Davis discharged them Jan. 31. All respectable citizens believed that bribery had taken place, and bribery Was publicly charged, especially after it was discovered that only one man had held out for Tweed from beginning to end, and that man's autocedents and surroundings had been ascertained. It may well be believed that on the 1st of Feb-ruary, 1878, public indignation was at a boiling point. Honest men were meeting together and resolving that, in spite of the temporary triumph of corruption, one more effort should be made to convict Tweed, and that it should be successful. Col. Fellows had been a high-Salaried servant of the city for the three previous years; he knew the corrupt spots in the machinery of justice, and he was bound by every sentiment of honor, as well as by the code of morals of the legal profession to which he belonged, to aid in the movement for conviction. The fact that he had gone out of office did not absolve him from his allegiance to the prosecution. A lawyer cannot turn round and do friendly acts for the other side because his term of office on one side has expired. If he could do no more, Col, Fellows might at least have done something toward assuring the people that justice should not go with the thieves; that no favors should be asked of

What did he do on that eventful day when Tweed was celebrating his escape from punishment with his "pals" and good citizens were going about gloomy, but determined? He spent the day in writing abject letters to Tweed, pitifully begging for money. "I am sorry to have to have to avail myself of your generous offer of yesterday." greed, and that Col. Fellows, side by side with 'Billy' Moloney, witnessed the look of triumph that came over Tweed's face as Judge Davis gave up in despair and told the jurers that they were

It may well be supposed from the words of his letter that, knowing that Tweed must be in good humor, he seized the auspicious occasion before Tweed left the court-room and asked him for money. Tweed evidently said "All right." It wasn't much; only five hundred or so; and the Colonel ventured to remind him of it the next morning. Not getting it, at about 2 r. M. he sent messenger, and that appeal was successful-

"An's'd with check for $523. DEWEY." Like Brian de Bols Guilbert in "Ivanhoe," Tweed belonged to the confraternity that did known, then I am greatly mistaken. naught for naught. When he gave Col. Fellows money it was because Col. Fellows had done him a anything to with packing the jury service. The letters bear internal evidence that the relations of the ex-Assistant District-Attorney and the thief against whom he had been forced to find an indictment were intimate, friendly and of

At this time, when Col. Fellows is appealing to his fellow-citizens to elect him to the District-Attorneyship, the most important duty of which will be the prosecution of just such thieves as Tweed, it would be very proper for him to explain just what services he rendered to Tweed before, during and after his trial, and just how much money Tweed gave hfm therefor. Col. Pellows is making eloquent speeches every same cause that he and Tweed and their friends were denouncing it in 1972, and it is interesting to learn that the gallant Colonel was just as much in need of money to pay his common family debts then as he has been all the time since. Let him in his next speech stop scolding the Times for a few pened, Feb. 1, 1878, when honest citizens all over the city were contriving ways and means to secure an impartial jury to send Tweed to prison, he was humbly begging him for money and servilely im-ploring him to "excuse this seeming persist-

SUMMONSES BY THE WHOLESALE.

All of the Woodford Speakers are on Government's List.

ISPECIAL CABLE TO THE EVENING WORLD, I DUBLIN, Nov. 4 .- The summons issued under the Coercion act against Mr. J. R. Cox. M. P. for West Clare, comes on for hearing in Ennis to-day, but the honorable gentleman is not expected to put in an appearance, in which event a warrant for his apprehension will be issued.

Mr. Douglas Pyne, one of the members for Waterford County, and Mr. Gilhooly, one of instalments. If it was a loan Tweed's estate has a the members for Cork County, are among those summoned under the Coercion act. The former is charged with inciting to the resistance of the law, the latter with taking part in a criminal conspiracy to compel persons to boycott others in connection with the late midnight meeting at Woodford.

The executives are expected to issue summonses by the wholesale. At this meeting Mr. O'Brien, M. P., burned a copy of the prohibitory proclamation, and it is said that all the principal men taking part in that meeting, except the men already prosecuted, will be summoned. The names of Mr. T. P. Gill, one of the members for Louth, and Mr. Rowlands, an English M. P., are mentioned as to be summoned.

Mr. O'Brien's three points in Tullamore Jail hold the field. He will not do menial work, he will not herd with criminals, and up to the present he has not been asked to do so. His intimation to the Governor on entering the prison that he would not do these things continues to engage the attention of the Government.

As anticipated, Mr. Cox, M. P., did not attend at Ennis to-day to answer the charge under the Coercion Act, and the magistrate at once issued a warrant for his arrest.

Courts of the Queen's Bench granted a motion for a writ of habeas corpus to-day to bring up George Freeman and ten Emergency men in custody on the Coroner's warrant in connection with the murder of John Kinsella at Coolgreany. They are in the Wexford jail and will be taken to the Wexford Petty Sessions for their depositions to be taken.

FELLOWS'S INTIMACY SHOWN WITH THE BIGGEST ROBBER THAT EVER LIVED.

Wheeler H. Peckham Says that Fellows Could Have Rendered the Most Valuable Services to Tweed-Nicoll's Election Insured by the Revelation-Mayor Hewitt Declines to Say Anything About the Case.

Wheeler H. Peckham, who was the principal associate of District-Attorney Phelps in conducting the prosecutions against the Tweed Ring in 1878, said to a reporter of THE EVENING WORLD this morning :

"Yes, I have read the letters published in the Times to-day, and must acknowledge that they show Col. Fellows in an extremely queer and suspicious light. Anybody can draw that conclusion from them, and unless these suspicions can be entirely disproved it will be a very serious matter for Fellows," Do you think they prove that Col. Fellows had rendered some valuable service for 'The only conclusive inference that the letters will support in my opinion is that there was a close intimacy between Col. Fellows and a man who, as every one else knew, was the biggest robber that ever lived. If the people of this city want a man for District-Attorney against whom such a serious fact as this is far as proving that he had or bribing officers or jury it is clear that there is not evidence to support such a charge conclusively in the letters printed, nor did I ever at the time hear of any suspicions being directed against Col. Fellows in this respect." What was the connection of Col. Fel-

"What was the connection of Col. Fellows with the Tweed ring?"
"Officially he had none whatever, for he was out of office when Tweed's trial came on. During the preparations for the trial, however, and the drawing up of the indictments, &c., he was in the office and knew as much' as anybody in the District-Attorney's office at that time about the steps which were being taken by the prosecution.

"Of course, he did not know hs much as I did, but he knew enough of what was going on to be able to render the most valuable assistance to the defense had he chosen so to do.

"Although we know that Mr. Garvin, who was then District Attorney, was friendly to Tweed and his crowd, having been elected through their influence, we trusted in his protestations that, although he did not want to prosecute his friends himself, he would give the prosecutors every facility of the District Attorney's office, and merely hold a position of neutrality Whether all his assistants remained equally honorable I cannot say; but we believed them to be.

"Mr. Garvin and Mr. Fellows were in court during some of the earlier trials, and gave support to the prosecution by their presence, although they never took an active part in the proceedings. You can see what a peculiar position the prosecution was placed in by this attitude of the District Attorney's office, and it was for this reason that the prosecution of these offenders was turned over to outsiders.

"There is not the slightest doubt that most of those jurors who voted for acquittal were bribed after they had been selected, but who could have done it I never was able to discover. During the selection of the jury Col, Fellows was a constant attendant in court, he being then out of office, and he was also, I remember, always on hand during the trial. But so were a great many others who were known to be friends of the defendants.

A reporter for THE EVENING WORLD called on Mayor Hewitt at his office this morning. The following conversation occurred: Reporter—Mr. Mayor, when you gave your indorsement to Col. John R. Fellows did you know that he had received $523 from William M. Tweed on the day following the day the jury in the trial of Tweed had failed to agree?

Mayor Hewitt—I have already declared—in all good nature, I say to you—that I will say nothing to The World.

nothing to The World.

Reporter, presenting a copy of the Times—You have read the charges to that effect in this morning's Times, have you not?

Mayor Hewitt—Whether I have or not, I cannot say. If any one has made any false charges against Col. Fellows, they must prove them. I will not talk to The World.

Reporter—But, Mr. Mayor, I assure you that The Evenno World would be only too glad to print anything which you may have to say regarding this matter.

Mayor Hewitt—Thank you. I will not trouble The World.

An Evening Workd reporter encountered

An Evening Workd reporter encountered Boss Power in Centre street this morning and put to him this question: "When you insisted on the nomination of Col. Fellows did you know that he had received $523 from William M. Tweed the day after the jury disagreed on Tweed's first trial?"

"The Tweed business was sifted and gone over years ago," Boss Power replied, "and no story printed at this late day can involve Col. Fellows."

"Do you deny that Col. Fellows borrowed the money from Tweed?"

"I know nothing about it. You had better ask Col. Fellows himself. Let those who make these charges prove them."

SOME OTHER OPINIONS. Mr. Theodore W. Myers, candidate for Comptroller on the United Democratic ticket, said—I really do not wish to express an opinion on the matter. You see I am in an opinion on the matter. You see I am in rather a delicate position.

"What effect do you think the revelation of Col. Fellows's intimacy with Tweed will have on his vote?"

"I think that he will be able to explain it satisfactorily. I hope so, at least, It will however, doubtless have considerable effect upon voters who had not, up to to-day, made up their minds. As I said, I am in a somewhat delicate position. I know both the candidates for District Attorney and have the highest respect for them.

Gen. Barlow—I never thought that Col. Fellows really took money from Tweed until to-day. I had, however, a conviction which I could not throw off that he was not a fit man for District-Attorney.

W. M. Tewksbury—Fellows's fate is scaled. The revelations of to-day must convince overy one of his unfitness to hold office.

Henry W. Unger—Col. Fellows has not the ghost of a show. The papers held back their ammunition wisely until the last moment. Nothing that the Fellows people can do between now and Tuesday will stop the reaction. I regard Nicoll's election as sure.

The same questions were asked of Assistant District-Attorney James Fitzgerald. He said:

"This charge comes too late in the day, and I don't believe it will have the slightest effect on Col. Fellows's supporters or diminish his plurality in the least."

FELLOWS CALLS IT A LOAN.

He Says No Man Would Take a Check For a Bribe, and That He Repaid Tweed.

For the first time in many days Col. John R. Fellows visited the District-Attorney's office this morning. He wore his ever present campaign smile and was smoking the remnant of a Democratic campaign cigar. It could not have been a satisfactory smoke for he took it from his lips and dashed it to the ground saying: "That cigar is a bad one."

Then he asked who was in the office and Then he asked who was in the office and was told by Clerk Penney that Mr. Nicoll was in his room. Col. Fellows debated a moment, then a peculiar smile lit up his face, and he walked rapidly to the end of the hall where a door bore the following words: "De Lancey Nicoll."

The Colonel tapped at the door, which was presently opened. He disappeared within, and the door slammed to with a bang.

The interview tetween De Lancey Nicoll and Col. Fellows lasted ten minutes. Then the Colonel emerged, wearing an ordinary smile and smoking a cigar.

"I am smoking a Nicoll cigar." he remarked, in his hail-fellow-well-met way to Detective Phil Reilley. "I must say though that I have smoked many a better one."

As he was about to leave he was stopped by a gentleman, with whom he had the following conversation:

"Is it true, Col. Fellows, that you borrowed $253 from William M. Tweed the day after the jury disagreed on Tweed's first trial, and that you wrote the letters to Tweed which are printed in the Times today?"

"It is true that I wrote the letters, but the deductions drawn therefrom by the Times are entirely false. I was hard up for $500 on Feb. 1, 1873. I applied for the money to Mr. Tweed, who was an old friend of mine and had helped me out before.

"It was absolutely necessary for me to have the money before 5 o'clock, and as that time was rapidly approaching and the money not arriving, I wrote the second note which had the desired result. I paid back the money to Mr. Dewey, Mr. Tweed's Secretary about a week afterward at Delmonico's."

"Was the return payment made in one of ico's."

"Was the return payment made in one of your checks?"

"No, in bills."

"Did you think, Colonel, that an erroneous interpretation might be placed upon the fact that you asked this money of Tweed the day after the jury failed to agree in his case?"

the day after the jury failed to agree in his case?"

'Not at all. I was no longer Assistant District Attorney, and had nothing to do with Tweed's prosecution.

'Besides, no man would be so foolish as to receive a bribe in the shape of a check."

'Did you ever render Mr. Tweed services for which you might expect payment after his trial?"

'None whatever. He lent me the money because he was a friend of mine. That is all,"

Which, it is alleged, he promised to pay for when the sale of the goods was made or to return the same. Abraham M. Laredo, commission merchant of 31 Broadway, and Charles S. Teaton, Secretary of the Mutual Trust Company, who lives at Ninctleth street and Park avenue, who were charged with receiving the goods, were also arraigned. Among the most ardent supporters of these organizations are young Democrats, who are working heart and soul to rid the party of bosses and boodlers. They have joined the clubs in crowds and are still coming in. There is one club in the Twenty-third District which has a membership of 400, of whom 250 are Democrats and 150 Republicans. All the Democratic members are men who voted for Mr. Hewitt for Mayor a year ago, and 100 of the 150 Republicans who voted for Mr. Hewitt. This is merely an illustration, but it can be taken as giving a preity accurate idea of the general situation. They are all solid for Nicoll.

The Organization Committee of the Independents have sent out from the Nicoll headquarters an urgent appeal for volunteers to work at the polls and act as watchers on election day. All willing to serve in this capacity should at once send their names and residences to George W. Green, Chairman of Organization Committee, 225 Broadway. That the Nicoll boom in the downtown exchanges is on the increase is a matter of notoriety. Every day prominent brokers who have not hitherto declared themselves who have not hithero declared themselves are coming out openly and strongly in favor of the reform candidate. The feeling in favor of Nicoll is particularly strong in the Stock Exchange, while in the Produce Exchange the general sentiment in favor of the people's candidate is hardly less pro-

The startling revelations made this morn-The startling revelations made this morning reg: ng two of Col. Fellows's financial transactions have thrown the ranks of the boodlers and bosses into the direct confusion and demoralized the leaders. The effect was so marked this morning that the odds given in the betting made a big jump in favor of Nicoll, and sporting men now regard the chances of Fellows for election as practically gone.

WILL DICKINSON ACCEPT

UNDOUBTEDLY HE HAS BEEN OFFERED A CABINET PORTFOLIO.

Col. Lamont Dacs Not Know and President Cleveland Won't Talk, but Despai Received at Detroit State Explicitly the Michigan Democratic Lawyer Has

DETROIT, Nov. 4.—The report that Don M. Dickinson, of this city, is to be Postma General, is confirmed here to the extent that despatches have been received in Detroit stating with great explicitness that Mr. Dickinson has been offered the position and has as yet neither declined nor accepted it. He is in New York to-day on his way ho If Mr. Dickinson accepts, he will take the office before the end of the present month.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 4.—At the White House very little information can be obtained regarding the mooted Cabinet changes. Col. Lamont says that he knows nothing about Lamont says that he knows nothing about the matter, and the President declines to be interviewed. Mr. Dickinson was asked by THE EYBING WORLD'S correspondent vesterday if he was going into the Cabinet, Mr. Dickinson said that he had no ambition in that direction, that he should retire from polities next year and devote himself exclusively to his private practice, which was large and had suffered from neglect.

It is understood that Mr. Dickinson has been offered a Cabinet position. He had a long conference with the President Wedneday night. Mr. Dickinson, it is understood has not decided finally what he will do, but will send the President a definite reply when has not decided finally what he will do, but will send the President a definite reply when he arrives in Detroit.

"No man," said Mr. Dickinson, "can say anything authoritatively as to what the President's intentions are regarding any changes in his Cabinet. I don't think any member of his Cabinet has any information on the subject. The President has a habit of keeping his own counsel on such matters and deciding them for himself.

HORRIBLE BUTCHERY IN KENTUCKY.

Joseph Brownfield Kills Three People and then Hangs Himself. LOUISVILLE, Ky., Nov. 4 .- A he tragedy occurred here this morning. Jos Brownfield, blacksmith, despondent inability to secure work, out his wife's throat. killing her instantly. He then formed the same service for ten-year-old child, completely severing its head. His brother-in-law living with him was the next victim, the razor still being the instrument of his bloody work. After he had made sure that all three of his victims were dead he procured a halter and hanged himself from the transom of his bedroom.

Miss Locke, the beautiful young woman who fell desperately in love with Spies and whose attentions during the trial were so marked and the occasion of much newspaper comment, called upon Capt. Black this morning in company with a stylishly dressed and equally fascinating young woman. Capt. Black was evidently desirous of keeping the facts of the visit of the two young ladies from the public. The supposition was that they had made a proposition to visit the Governor and intercede in behalf of the seven.

Editor Curtin, of the Arbeiter Zeitung, says that the petition signed by Spies, case of the brass workers came up. The scation of the Board in having levied an assessment of 25 cenis per head on the local assemblies, was the subject of discussion. Twenty-flye local assemblies had projested against the assessment, but the Executive Board determined to stand by its action, and upon its authority to domand surrender of the charters of rebellious locals. All the locals opposed to the assessment are making a lively canvass in opposition to it, and claim these next Sunday's meeting of the district will be the liveliest ever he.d. says that the petition signed by Spies, Fielden and Schwab was for justice, not mercy, and reiterated their innocence. tickets this year. The work of distribut begun yesterday. This promptness is no doubt due to the sad experience of the Pro last year. The distribution of ballots at last year's election was let out on contract to a corporation that had a great many measurement in its employ. Late in the afternoon of the day before election the corporation sent word to the Prohibition head-quarters that it could not carry out its contract. As a result there were no Prohibition tickets to be had on election day. The Prohibition vots was only 576, as against more than 5,000 the year before. This year new managers of the party have had charge of things with better results.
